The Story and You™

Sacred Conversation

Second Sunday of Advent

There are so many ways to waste time on the internet these days, but I can't stop myself from lingering over those heart-warming videos of those inter-species animals playing and cuddling up together.

Here's a cat and dog opening a door, a bear and tiger snuggling, a beautiful bird swimming with a dolphin. What speaks to us, I think, in these anomalies of nature is that the animals seem to delight in getting to know each other, to investigate each other's fur and size and wingspan, without fear of betrayal or attack.

It's that peaceable kingdom, that idyllic and lovely playground where animals frolic instead of preying on each other, which Isaiah promises. Imagine it. In spite of everything we have ever thought, the most terrifying of tigers is actually meant to snuggle contentedly with the sheep in the pasture. Why?

Because the tiger is not hungry, and is not hunting among the defenseless lambs for food for her cubs. Take hunger out of the equation, and the Peaceable Kingdom has already arrived.

There might be some memory extraction required. Eagles and fish will need to rethink their relationship. Tigers might need to unlearn what they've known for thousands of years. But oh, what a fun education that would be.

Are humans smart enough to attend this school? Can the most recent—and by far most predatory—arrivals in earth's long history miraculously pull together and save ourselves? Can we, finally, learn to work together to open the locked door, to find comfort in each other, to delight in swimming the seas together? As Advent always asks, "If not now, when? If not us, who?"

How are you helping to bring about the Peaceable Kingdom?

Segundo Domingo de Adviento

Existen tantas maneras de desperdiciar el tiempo en el internet hoy en día, y yo no puedo evitar entretenerme con esos videos que te enternecen el corazón de animales de varias especies jugando juntos y apapachándose.

Hay uno de un gato y un perro abriendo una puerta, un oso y un tigre acurrucados, un hermoso pájaro volando con un delfín. Lo que nos impresiona, creo yo, en estas rarezas de la naturaleza es que los animales parecen deleitarse en conocerse, en investigar como es el pelaje del otro, el tamaño de sus alas, sin miedo de un ataque o de una traición. Es ese Reino Pacifico, ese ideal y encantador parque de juegos donde los animales retozan en vez de atacarse, el cual promete Isaías. Imagínatelo. A pesar de todo lo que hemos pensado antes, el más aterrador de los tigres realmente fue hecho para acurrucarse contentamente con la oveja en el pasto. ¿Por qué? Porque el tigre no tiene hambre, y no está cazando a los indefensos corderos para conseguir alimento para sus cachorros. Si sacas el hambre de la ecuación, el reino pacifico ha llegado ya.

Tal vez se requiera de un tanto de extracción de recuerdos. Las águilas y los peces van a tener que reinventar su relación. Los tigres tendrán que desaprender lo que han sabido por miles de años. Pero, oh, que tan divertida educación sería eso. ¿Somos los humanos lo suficientemente inteligentes para asistir a esta escuela? ¿Podemos los más recientes- y por mucho los más depredadores- habitantes en la larga historia de la tierra enmendarnos y salvarnos a nosotros mismos? ¿Podemos, finalmente, aprender a trabajar juntos para abrir las puertas cerradas, para encontrar consuelo unos en los otros, para deleitarnos al nadar en los mares juntos? Como siempre, el Adviento nos pregunta, "¿Si no ahora, entonces cuándo? ¿Si no nosotros, entonces quiénes?"
¿Cómo estás ayudando tú a traer a la tierra ese Reino Pacifico?
